2/25/2020 Pixton

Copy of Discovery Myself

By Katie

As a child, I never care about what I wanted to be when I grow up. I was not the greatest in school. The only thing I care about was drawing and video games from Nickelodeon or Disney.

At some point, I want to be a singer because I like to sing in a group. I had faith in wanting to be a singer since I was in the fourth grade.

However, I discovered I am not good at standing in front of a group of people. It was hard just to present something. It has been like that since middle school

Every time I get to ask the question about what I want to do in the future the answer chance would be I didn't know or something random.

Everything chance when I was in 8th grade. I began code with HTML. I was not the best but try. It was fun designing a web page but hard to keep with my classmates.

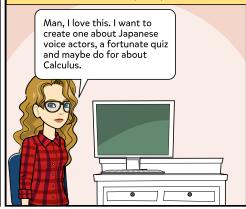

I did not continue to develop my HTML skills but at the beginning of 9th grade, I started this Computer Science I like at the beginning. It changes my life as learning HTML did.

However, at the end of the class, I learned Python and assignments were coming out from nowhere making me cry. I dislike anything to code. I did not want to do anything for a year.

After a year without learning code, I decide to a Girls Who Code camp and found my love of coding websites and soon I will start to develop everywhere.

Katie, your free trial has expired.

UPGRADE